The U.S.-China Economic and Trade Advisory Committee (UCETAC) was established in 2002 to provide future scholars with insights into the relationship between the United States and China. The committee was created in response to a growing concern about the impact of China’s economic power on global trade and investment.

The committee’s mandate is to promote understanding of China’s economic and trade policies and their effects on the global economy. The committee is composed of experts from a wide range of fields, including economics, law, business, and international relations.

The committee’s work is guided by a set of principles that are intended to ensure that its recommendations are based on sound evidence and are grounded in a broad understanding of China’s economic and trade policies. The committee is committed to providing policymakers with the information they need to make informed decisions on trade and investment issues.

The committee’s work is widely recognized for its high level of academic rigor and its focus on practical policy recommendations. Its work has been cited by policymakers and scholars alike as a valuable resource for understanding the complex relationship between the United States and China.

The committee’s work has been particularly influential in the area of trade policy. Its recommendations have been influential in shaping the policies of both the United States and China, and its work has been cited by policymakers and scholars alike as a valuable resource for understanding the complex relationship between the United States and China.
